

Uber Eats — Investor Pitch

"Anything, in minutes."

From food delivery to the operating system for local commerce.

Eating out and everyday shopping are still clunky

- Restaurants can only serve who walks in — empty seats and waste are lost revenue.
- Consumers want "now, nearby" — but every store's ordering flow is different.
- Small local merchants lack the digital rails to capture nearby demand.

Local inventory and immediate demand simply aren't connected.

A platform that links supply and demand in minutes

- Demand: instant access to a 140M-consumer base.
- Delivery: a driver network owns the last mile.
- Expansion: from meals to groceries, retail and alcohol.

IN ONE LINE

"Make every shelf in the city deliverable in minutes." Food is the entry point to all of local commerce.

Food delivery is only the front door.

Behaviour has shifted — irreversibly

- Post-pandemic delivery demand stayed high and became everyday infrastructure.
- Operational efficiency flipped unit economics into profit.
- High-margin revenue (ads, Uber One subscription) is now scaling.

The "will they use it" phase is over; the "is it profitable" phase has begun.

Large today, far larger tomorrow

CORE — Food delivery

- 11,000+ cities across 45 countries
- 1.5M+ merchant partners
- #1 delivery brand in Japan (Mar 2024)

EXPANSION — Local commerce

- Grocery, convenience, retail, alcohol
- Fast-growing advertising business
- Loyalty via Uber One

Beyond food lies the far bigger prize of local commerce.

Scale and profitability, at the same time

- ~140 million consumers ordered on Uber Eats in 2024.
- Delivery Gross Bookings ~$20.1B in a single quarter (Q4 2024, +18% YoY).
- Delivery turned Adjusted-EBITDA positive, with improving margins.
- Uber platform reached 171 million monthly active consumers.

We have entered the phase of growing and earning at once.
